

Elizabeth Foyt

With a passion for libraries and a deep commitment to journalism and community service, Elizabeth Foyt's career trajectory has included media roles in public TV, print journalism, and radio.

Elizabeth is a second-generation journalist who attended Arizona State University, where she graduated with dual degrees in library science and education, laying the foundation for a career dedicated to knowledge dissemination and community enrichment. Her graduate studies at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV) showcased her multifaceted interests, encompassing curriculum development and economics.

Elizabeth's early professional endeavors were rooted in the Clark County School District, where she played a pivotal role in developing libraries and career centers for several alternative high schools. Her work extended to public television, where she served as an educational consultant to VEGAS PBS.

Her journalism journey continued as she contributed to the Las Vegas Review-Journal, which eventually led to the role of Society Editor for GMG Greenspun Media, where she lent her talents to the Las Vegas SUN newspaper and magazine publications Las Vegas LIFE and Las Vegas HOME+DESIGN. Elizabeth's career journey also included Nevada Public Radio (NPR), where she worked as a community affairs coordinator, extending her impact beyond the written word to the airwaves.

Community service has been an integral part of Elizabeth's pursuits, and her long service as a Trustee for the Las Vegas-Clark County Library District demonstrates this. She has also been involved in charitable boards and volunteer offices, including the Girl Scouts advisory board, Organ Donor Network events team, Planned Parenthood board, Junior League, Junior Mesquite, and contributing to the establishment of Nevada Reading Week. She is a current member of the Mesquite Club.
